challenge twice as large In both state elites have sought to mitigate such polarization by embarking upon a program of ethnic redistribution with growth that is advancing subjugated ethnic majorities into the middle class through state intervention without fundamentally alienating the privileged ethnic minority upon whose economic dominance the process of social advance depends However what happens if globalization prevents state elites from employing ethnic redistribution with growth How do these state elites attempt to retain their legitimacy and what happens if they do not succeed Van der Westhuizen examines these issues by showing how state elites in Malaysia and apartheid South Africa successfully pursued ethnic redistribution with growth during the heydays of Keynesianism and Fordism and the complexity of such a strategy in the post Cold War post Fordist world of the competition state He examines the ways in which Malaysia and South Africa have adapted to globalization by becoming competition states and the implication this process has for democratic consolidation He provides a provocative analysis of particular interest to scholars students and researchers involved with development studies international political economy and comparative politics The Parliamentarian ,1999 The Regulatory State in an Age of Governance Roger King,2007-09-15 This is a highly readable and comprehensive account of the regulatory state and governance It examines both key concepts and theories and important policy domains and utilises comparative historical and transnational perspectives A critical theme is consideration of whether the regulatory state that has developed in recent decades often as an accompaniment to marketization public policies is an authoritarian or a liberalizing mode of governance
