Whistleblowing Guidance

Whistleblowing Guidance

- Should I blow the whistle?
Whistleblowing occurs when someone reports another to an alleged wrongdoing. Typically, that concern will be related to something that happened at work. It should always be in the public interest.
- Can I report internally?
A whistleblowing disclosure should be made to your headteacher, a senior leader, or governor, or other designated individual.
- Can I report externally?
You can choose to make a disclosure when you feel that all in your organisation have been notified, or if you are concerned about the safety of the public. In such cases, you should report your concerns directly to the media or a prescribed body.
- How do I make a disclosure?
You can make a disclosure verbally or in writing. You should not disclose your identity as a whistleblower. You can report anonymously but it is best to do so through a third party, such as a solicitor or a trade union representative.
- What action will be taken?
There is no standard response time or process for assessing whistleblowing concerns. If you made your disclosure externally, the body to which you made the report will have their own procedure which you should follow.
- What happens if I am treated unfairly following a disclosure?
The Public Interest Disclosure Act (PIDA) protects whistleblowers from negative treatment as a result of a disclosure. If you feel you have been treated unfairly, you should contact the Employment Tribunal. The whistleblowing process is available and will be followed with a view to ensuring a fair and equitable outcome for all involved.
