

Conceivability and Possibility

- Inference from 1 to 2 in the Argument from Conceivability presupposes that if a proposition is conceivably true, then it is logically possibly true.
- It is conceivable that F exist without G = One can fully understand the concept of F without understanding the concept of G, or vice versa.
 - Example: It is conceivable that Obama not be the 44th president of the USA.
- A proposition p is logically possible = p is not self-contradictory.
- A proposition is physically possible = it is consistent with the laws of physics.
- Many propositions that are logically possibly true are in fact false.
 - Example: It is possible that Obama not be the 44th president of the USA.
- Some propositions that are possibly true are even physically impossible.
 - Example: It is logically possible but physically impossible that $E=mc^3$.
