

STRUCTURALISM

As a concept it refers to all those methods applied to investigate, describe and explain the underlying structure of society (e.g. language).

E.g. It assumes that the way language is used is determined by unspoken rules of society. These unspoken rules are known as the 'deep structure'. The deep structure of one culture will be different from that of other cultures.

Reality lies in that deep structure...

E.g. Restaurant Menu:

- ✓ Obey unspoken rules, therefore no chocolate on pigs ears for a starter.
- ✓ Rules vary between cultures.
- ✓ What is normal? Societal Norms?

Language reveals the reality that lies in the deep structures.

e.g. Neologisms

Historical Background of Structuralism:

- Karl Marx: when he developed his economic, political and social theories, he was exposing the Capitalist deep structure (Capitalism dominating society).
- Claude Levi-Strauss: A collective practice of laws and values directs the individuals thinking and behaviour. The collective consciousness (deep structure) of a society forms the core of human nature on which the individual is dependent for his/her identity.
- Media Professionals would find this useful as it indicates that it is possible to appeal to certain characteristics in a social group with a reasonably high chance that most individuals from that group will respond in the same way (targeting messages)
- Roland Barthes had another perspective on human society that is important for media communicators. — Myth — socially constructed beliefs about how things are.
- These myths are believed without questioning by the society that produces them. People organise their lives to fit in with the myth (e.g. Virgin Cure)

E.g. Western societies: existence of the stable family unit. This is increasingly not true as the number of single parents are increasing all the time. Still the myth remains.
