WW2
FACT FILES

ANTHONY J. WATTS

The development of undersea warfare during World War 2 proved the value of the submarine as a weapon capable of exerting immense influence on both strategy and tactics. By the start of the war the Axis forces had developed submarine Fleets based on their own ideas concerning underwater warfare and these concepts were clearly reflected in the submarine designs. As Allied A/S techniques improved so new Axis designs were developed to counter these technical advances. Every class of submarine operated or planned by the Axis is listed together with a short background to the design. Tables list the technical data and a brief note of the fate of each submarine.
