

Species concepts

What are species?

Species concepts and definitions continue to be one of the most controversial topics in biology.

A large number of alternative species concepts exist, each with its own strengths and limitations.

Species concepts

Typological species concept

A species is a set of organisms that resemble one another and is distinct from other sets (Linnaeus).

But:

- Do large differences in phenotype always reflect large differences in relatedness among organisms?
- How well are we able to discern small, but significant, differences?

Species concepts

Typological species concept

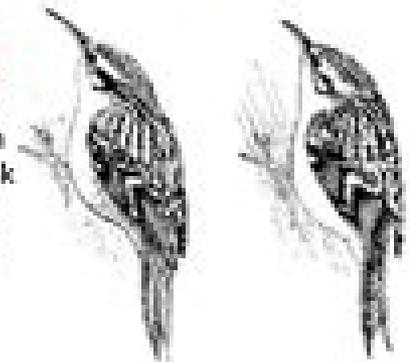

Large differences in morphology may be due to single-locus differences, as seen in the color polymorphisms of snow geese and king snakes.

Species concepts

Typological species concept

Small differences in morphology may be difficult to detect, as with the slight brown coloration on the flank and shorter claw on the hind toe of the short-toed treecreeper.
