Purpose of Educational Research

Every individual has their own beliefs about the best way to teach. How do they know that their beliefs are correct, though? Is it possible to support your beliefs with more valid evidence than just that you believe it to be true, it is true from your personal experiences, or that an expert said that it is true? Sometimes two people have two opposite beliefs, so is it possible to determine which person is right? For example, some individuals think that pupils should be given constant positive encouragement to improve academic achievement. On the other hand, other individuals think that positive encouragement will decrease academic achievement because a pupil will think that they do not need to keep putting forth effort. These are two opposite beliefs, so which is true?

Educational research is the answer to all of the above questions. Educational research uses the scientific method to study best practices in teaching. An educational research study can be conducted to answer the question: Will students learn better or worse when they are given positive encouragement? To do this, the scientific method will be employed to compare a group of students who are given positive encouragement with a group of students given negative criticism and a control group of students given no encouragement. After receiving positive encouragement, negative criticism, or no encouragement, individuals in these groups will then be compared on important dependent learning variables such as their performance, effort, and motivation. Once this has been done, the data will provide a definitive answer about whether positive encouragement, negative criticism, or no encouragement results in the best academic performance. Educational research that uses the scientific method to collect scientific data can provide a definite answer about best practices in teaching.

The purpose of educational research is to develop new knowledge about the teaching-learning situation to improve educational practice. Educational research can address the following variables:

- Learning: How do students best learn various subjects?
- Teaching: What are the best teaching practices to foster student achievement?
- Motivation: What are the best practices for teachers to motivate their students to achieve?
- Development: How do children and adults change over time, including their cognitive, social, and emotional skills?
- Classroom management: What classroom or school practices make the classroom optimal for student learning?

By collecting scientific data about these important topics in education, educational research can establish the best practices that teachers, counselors, administrators, and students should use to improve learning outcomes. Therefore, educational researchers - particularly researchers in Nigeria - should focus on practical research projects that will have significant implications for education.
