Hearnshaw,1966      Comparative Psychology: Evolution and Development of Behavior Talia Gomez,2021-11-16 The sub field of psychology which focuses on the behavior and mental processes of non human animals is known as comparative psychology The two most prominent areas of study under this field are the commonness of behavior across animal species and the relationship of behavior with reproduction This includes the quantitative and qualitative similarities and differences observed across a wide range of species The physiological and environmental components which trigger a particular behavior are also studied under this field It also aims to understand the psychological state of a domesticated or caged species and their corresponding behavior It also explores typical behavior such as tonic immobility imitation hoarding nest building etc This discipline has significant applications in the fields of medicine ecology and animal training This book traces the progress of this field and highlights some of its key concepts and applications While understanding the long term perspectives of the topics the book makes an effort in highlighting their impact as a modern tool for the growth of the discipline It includes contributions of experts and scientists which will provide innovative insights into the field of comparative psychology      The Impact of Complex Trauma on Development Cheryl Arnold,Ralph Fisch,2011-10-16 The Impact of Complex Trauma on Development describes what happens cognitively and emotionally behaviorally and relationally to people who are repeatedly traumatized in childhood Part One brings together trauma theory with a number of theories of human development It directly addresses and describes developmental pathology and its origins Through powerful examples it conveys to the reader the pain and destruction caused by ongoing trauma abuse and continuous stress Part Two written from the perspective of a clinician who has worked extensively with traumatized children and adults is primarily directed to mental health professionals and graduate students. These chapters are devoted to describing how to recognize the pathological consequences of trauma and how to intervene and remediate these developmental deficits. The overarching theory is psychoanalytically based and developmental, but other treatment approaches are integrated into the therapy when they are developmentally and therapeutically appropriate. The text raises important questions related to the development of the self, its relationship to therapy, and the diagnosis and treatment of complex trauma in children, adolescents, and adults.

The Journal of Comparative Psychology, 1923 Heinz Werner and Developmental Science Jaan Valsiner, 2006-11-22

Heinz Werner (1890-1964) was one of the three key developmental psychologists of the 20th century, along with Jean Piaget and Lev Vygotsky. This book is a new exploration of Werner's ideas and their social contexts in Vienna in his student years in Hamburg up to 1933, followed by the years of transit as an immigrant to America at times of economic depression, finally culminating in his establishment of the prominent Clark tradition in American psychology in the 1950s. The book offers an in-depth analysis of Werner's ideas as they were originally formulated in Vienna and Hamburg and how they were changed by North American influences. Werner's pivotal role between European and American intellectual traditions is illuminated through the use of rich memories of his former students, unique documents from Werner's personal library at Clark, and analyses of links with other European traditions in philosophy and biological sciences. The European period prior to 1933 in Werner's academic life is found to be definitive for Werner's contributions to science. The ideas developed in his early career continued in the form of a productive empirical research program in the 1950s at Clark. An analysis of the social intellectual climate of the development of psychology in America in the 1950s is a special feature of this book that will further enhance an understanding of Werner's unique contribution. This book will be of interest to developmental psychologists, sociologists, and historians of science, philosophers, practitioners working in special education and neuropsychology, and for general readers interested in the history of ideas and life courses of scientists.

The Psychological Index Howard Crosby Warren, Clement Leslie Vaughan, Knight Dunlap, Walter Samuel Hunter, 1898

An Introduction to Comparative Psychology Conwy Lloyd Morgan, 1903

The Incomplete Child Scot Danforth, 2009

With the passage of Public Law 94-142 in 1975, the learning disability construct gained national legitimacy. Feeding that political achievement behind the very idea of a learning disability was the development of a science that blended neurology, psychology, and education. This book tracks the historical creation of the science of learning disabilities, beginning with the clinical research with brain-injured World War I soldiers conducted by German physician Kurt Goldstein. It traces the growth of the two primary research traditions: the psycholinguistic theory of Samuel Kirk and the movement education of Newell Kephart, exploring how specific scientific orientations, theories, and practices led to the birth of the learning disability in the United States.
