

The 7 Parts of the Competent Communication Model

Communication as Transactional

Communication is a process that involves the exchange of information between two or more people. It is a transactional process, meaning that it involves both the sender and the receiver.

Goal

The goal of communication is to achieve a specific purpose or to convey a message. It is a purposeful activity that involves the use of language to achieve a specific goal.

Context

Context refers to the situation or environment in which communication takes place. It includes the physical setting, the social setting, and the cultural setting. Context can influence the way people communicate and the meaning of their messages.

Contextual factors include the physical setting, the social setting, and the cultural setting. These factors can influence the way people communicate and the meaning of their messages.

Participants and together

The participants in communication are the people who are involved in the exchange of information. They can be individuals or groups. Communication is a social activity that involves the interaction of multiple people.

Code

Code refers to the system of symbols or signs that are used to convey information. It includes the physical form of the message (e.g., spoken words, written words, gestures) and the meaning of the symbols. Code is a key component of communication.

Message Construction

Message construction is the process of putting together the elements of communication to create a meaningful message. It involves the selection of words, the organization of those words into sentences, and the use of nonverbal cues to convey meaning.
