

Key Factors for Platform Firm's competition strategy on Compatibility Innovation

Abstract: Supported by two-sided market and compatibility dynamic innovation theory, this paper takes the most innovative platform enterprises with typical open or exclusive characteristics from 2015 to 2020 in the world as samples. We build a model of influencing factors of competitive strategy under compatibility dynamic innovation of platform enterprise based on the theory of dynamic innovation and multiple regression analysis. The results show that, when the platform enterprise implement compatibility dynamic innovation, the customer's compatibility choice, the product's (service's) price and market share have significant influence on the profit of the platform. At the same time, the price of products (services), the endogenous value of the platform and the unit cost of innovation have significant influence on the platform's profit on the merchant's side. This paper aims to uncover the compatibility dynamics of platform enterprise's innovation and proposes a empirical model that can lead to better understand the platform enterprise's competitive strategy, as well as paving the way for future study of its various components.

Key Words: platform enterprise, compatibility dynamic innovation, competitive strategy

1. Introduction

The initial focus on open and closed platform stems from the coexistence of open and closed platform in the early computer industry. In the mid-1890s, with the rapid development of the Internet, competition between open and closed platform began to develop rapidly. Typical examples include Linux operating system and Windows operating system, open office software system (Open Office) and Microsoft's Microsoft office software system (Microsoft Office), Firefox browser (Firefox) and Apple's Safari browser, Apache ( Server software) and Microsoft's (MS Internet Server) server, as well as Google's Android operating system and Apple's iOS operating system.
