Controller Involvement In Management:

Business Unit Controller Involvement in Management J.A. ten Rouwelaar, Jan Bots, Maartje Vanamelsfort, 2008 In recent years there has been much debate on the new business oriented role of management accountants also called controllers The purpose of this paper is to investigate to what extent the involvement of the business unit BU controller in the decision making process of business units is impacted not only by organizational factors but also by the personal characteristics of BU controllers This exploratory study provides further insight into the various roles of BU controllers Survey data from 119 BU controllers in Dutch multidivisional organizations indicate that Controller Involvement in Management CIM takes two different forms CIM in strategic decisions and CIM in operating decisions CIM by BU controllers in strategic decisions is positively related to the degree of decentralization and the stability of performance of the business unit CIM in strategic decisions is also positively related to more extravert BU controllers The degree of CIM in operating decisions is related to interdependencies between business units and to strict hierarchical relationships between BU controllers and their BU managers or the corporate controller CIM in operating decisions is positively related to BU controllers who are open to new experience but negatively related to BU controllers who are tolerant and accepting towards others This study shows that the personal characteristics of BU controllers do actually matter in CIM in both strategic and operating decisions Controller Involvement in Management Vijay Sathe, 1982 Theoretical Review and Framework J.A. ten Rouwelaar, 2007 In the last decades the position of the business unit controller has grown in importance This study gives a review of the research behind the two roles which business unit controllers can fulfill in business life the support role and the control role The support role is associated with involvedness of controllers by supporting managerial decision making in the business unit the control role focuses on providing reliable and timely financial accounting information for the corporate level and insuring that the financial function complies with relevant regulations This paper contributes to the Management Accounting literature by documenting the available literature regarding the roles of controllers and by developing a theoretical framework to study the controller involvement in management Based upon this framework twelve propositions and a regression model are presented which can be used in future studies to test empirically which factors influence the controller involvement in management Strategic Management Control Fredrik Nilsson, Carl-Johan Petri, Alf Westelius, 2020-06-30 Strategic management control differs from traditional management control in several important respects First it supports both strategy formulation and strategy implementation Second it is to a large extent based on non financial information Third it deals with both the long and short term and supports not only tactical but also strategic and operational decision making Fourth and perhaps most importantly strategic management control is designed for and adapted to each organisation s unique strategies In this context the book emphasises the importance of dialogues The authors argue that it is unwise to assume that decisions taken at the top of the organisation will automatically be executed and obeyed throughout the organisation. Instead, they highlight the importance of dialogue and collaboration both between hierarchical levels within the organisation and between actors in the network. Such communication is essential to making management control processes both strategic and successful. The book follows a clear structure from the design of strategies to the everyday evaluation and discussion of performance and results. Though primarily intended for professionals working in strategy and management control at organisations, it will also benefit students and academics interested in strategy and management control.
