Convicts, Codes and Contraband by Vergil L. Williams and Mary Fish.

Ballinger Publishing Company (17 Dunster Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138), 1974, 176 pp., hardcover—$10.00.

Subtitled The Prison Lives of Men and Women, this work was written by two professors of criminal justice and economics, and focuses on prison hustling and inmate careers. Primary emphasis is on the sub rosa life style brought on by a system of control over prohibited goods and services, particularly with regard to prison rackets, prison sex, and prison economics. The authors have based the book on their experience as penitologists, their observations of prison populations, the writings of the offenders themselves, and a survey of American prison literature.

Chapters cover: "Culture and Economics," "The Inmate Culture," "Men's Prisons," "Women's Prisons," "Differences in Prison Cultures of Men and Women," and "Conceptualizing the Illicit Economic System and Its Implications." Each chapter contains a section of notes, and most chapters contain a summary. A bibliography and index are also included.

Selected Readings: Judicial Selection and Tenure edited by Glenn R. Winters.

American Judicature Society (1135 East 60th Street, Chicago, Illinois 60637), 1973, 241 pp., paperback.

The first edition of this collection of readings on judicial selection and tenure appeared in 1967. The editor states in his preface that in as much as there has been such great activity in the field since that time as more and more states return to systems of judicial appointment, this new edition was compiled to update the volume by deleting ten of the original articles and replacing them with thirteen more timely selections.

The book is divided into six sections. The first gives a broad summary and overview of the problems of selecting and retaining judges. The second section examines further the problems in recruitment of qualified judges. In the third section some of the pros and cons of election and appointment of judges are debated. The fourth section of the book examines the 1940 Missouri Non-Partisan Court Plan for selecting judges. Section five analyzes judicial selection experiences in a variety of other states. The final section shifts its focus away from the states and suggests reforms in the appointment of judges to federal courts.

Appendices include a summary of the extent to which the features of the merit plan have been adopted in the states, texts of constitutional and statutory provisions for selection of judges in several states (including the Model State Judicial Article), and a bibliography of further materials on the subject.

Selected Readings: Judicial Discipline and Removal edited by Glenn R. Winters, compiled by Richard A. Hanson.

American Judicature Society (1135 East 60th Street, Chicago, Illinois 60637), 1973, 146 pp., paperback.

This set of readings, collected by the editor of Judicature, is one in a series of six American Judicature Society Selected Readings. It focuses on the two main problem areas in judicial removal: first, the proper standards by which to evaluate the conduct or unfitness of a particular judge, and second, the types of mechanisms that can best apply these standards to individual cases.

Fourteen selections make up the work. The opening selection, from Hamilton's Federalist Papers,
