

When a record is received in the MARC communication format, each system displays it according to its own program. OCLC (Center for Online Computer Libraries in Dublin, Ohio) placed the fixed field at the top and used a mnemonic abbreviation to interpret the various codes that make up the 008 field. The LC catalog displays the fixed field as a long string of alphanumeric characters in position 008 without abbreviations or separation. The local system has a staff view that is quite different from the network system view. Public interfaces to catalogs generally don't display persistent fields at all (except in implementations that allow MARC viewing). System views also vary in things like spacing, placement of certain subfields, and so on.

A convention is followed whereby all MARC fields starting with the same first digit are identified as a group, namely:

1XX Main entry fields

2XX Title and edition fields

3XX Physical description fields

4XX Series fields

5XX Notes fields

6XX Subject fields

7XX Added entry and linking fields

8XX Series added entry and holdings data fields

9XX Local data fields
