The Water-mill Daniel Craig McCallum,1870 Alone Everywhere Khaled Hafdhi,2016-01-11 The novel tells the story of an educated young African male who moved from his homeland by boat in a long terrible voyage to Britain then Japan and eventually to the USA with the American dream of a better life in his mind In every place he made different experiences discovering people languages and cultures but in every place he went he finished up by being alone In the middle of the story he fell in love with an English girl and tasted many terrible experiences different jobs a prison experience a famous writer experience All his experiences end by many failures He is a selfish man guided only to one truth his individual talent It is because of such selfishness that he was lost He was unable to see the real achievements he started before traveling to Europe his job his family his girl and everything he gained in his native land in North Africa He followed his own truth that of being a man of literature regardless to the harm he may cause to himself and his North African people Coleridge and the
