- 1) American Holistic Medicine Association. American Holistic Medicine Association. Web. <http://www.holisticmedicine.org/>

I found this source to be incredible helpful. It allowed me to develop a differing viewpoint from that of current medical practices. I was able to produce a viable alternative to the how medicine and illness is currently being approached.

This website offers a comprehensive overview of holistic medicine. It describes various approaches to treatment including the emotional, physical, and spiritual approaches. Holistic practitioners often do more than just use medicine to treat illness. They use dietary approaches, herbal treatments, meditation and various other forms of treatment combined together for the synergistic affect. By using the information provided by this source I was not only able to argue against current medical practices, but I was able to offer a viable alternative to solve our problem.

- 2) "Antibiotic Resistance." Science Daily. ScienceDaily, LLC. Web. http://www.sciencedaily.com/articles/a/antibiotic_resistance.htm

In addition to being a useful source for the information on antibiotic resistance, I used it specifically for its definition of "antibiotic resistance". This definition was my favorite definition I found although they were all similar. I felt that it fit my purpose for the paper while also being a credible definition.

- 3) Barron, Jon. "World's Greatest Medical Advancements." Jonbarron.org. The Baseline of Health Foundation. Web. <http://www.jonbarron.org/article/worlds-greatest-medical-advancements>.

This source was a great source for me because I did not want to undermine the accomplishment of discovering penicillin. This website ranks it as the second greatest medical achievement in history. But, it also does the same thing I want to do: recognize that it is now causing our demise. It is a credible source that holds the same viewpoint that I hold, so I thought that it would be supportive to include it in my paper. The website also saw that drugs such as penicillin are crippling society because of their overuse and the ensuing problems.
