

Underwater Landscapes

If you were to drain water from an ocean, all sorts of amazing formations would be exposed. From the continental shelf gradually sloping out to sea, to mountains, ridges, trenches, volcanoes, reefs, and even waterfalls of sand, the ocean floor is more varied than can be imagined.

These land formations create depth in the ocean. Oceans have five zones of depth. Sunlight penetrates the top zone only, so that's where algae and plants grow. As you go lower through each zone, the water becomes dimmer until they are pitch-black. Amazingly, some creatures are able to live in this watery darkness, and they are some of the strangest looking life forms you will ever see.

FUN AND AMAZING FACTS

Many creatures living in the darkest ocean waters make their own light. It's called bioluminescence. These animals put on neon-like displays as a way to communicate with each other, for defense to scare predators away, or to attract prey.

Islands are the tops of mountains and volcanoes peaking (or should we say poking!) above the water.

Ocean volcanoes are responsible for 90 percent of all volcanic activity on Earth.

A reef is a ridge that forms just below or just above the ocean's surface. The Great Barrier Reef in Australia is made of hundreds of species of coral. It is Earth's largest living structure and the only living structure that can be seen from outer space.
