A Framework to Guide Selection of Chemical Alternatives National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Board on Environmental Studies and Toxicology, Board on Chemical Sciences and Technology, Committee on the Design and Evaluation of Safer Chemical Substitutions: A Framework to Inform Government and Industry Decisions, 2014-10-29

Historically regulations governing chemical use have often focused on widely used chemicals and acute human health effects of exposure to them as well as their potential to cause cancer and other adverse health effects. As scientific knowledge has expanded there has been an increased awareness of the mechanisms through which chemicals may exert harmful effects on human health as well as their effects on other species and ecosystems. Identification of high priority chemicals and other chemicals of concern has prompted a growing number of state and local governments as well as major companies to take steps beyond existing hazardous chemical federal legislation. Interest in approaches and policies that ensure that any new substances substituted for chemicals of concern are assessed as carefully and thoroughly as possible has also burgeoned. The overarching goal of these approaches is to avoid regrettable substitutions which occur when a toxic chemical is replaced by another chemical that later proved unsuitable because of persistence, bioaccumulation, toxicity or other concerns. Chemical alternative assessments are tools designed to facilitate consideration of these factors to assist stakeholders in identifying chemicals that may have the greatest likelihood of harm to human and ecological health and to provide guidance on how the industry may develop and adopt safer alternatives.

A Framework to Guide Selection of Chemical Alternatives develops and demonstrates a decision framework for evaluating potentially safer substitute chemicals as primarily determined by human health and ecological risks. This new framework is informed by previous efforts by regulatory agencies, academic institutions and others to develop alternative assessment frameworks that could be operationalized. In addition to hazard assessments the framework incorporates steps for life cycle thinking which considers possible impacts of a chemical at all stages including production, use and disposal as well as steps for performance and economic assessments. The report also highlights how modern information sources such as computational modeling can supplement traditional toxicology data in the assessment process. This new framework allows the evaluation of the full range of benefits and shortcomings of substitutes and examination of tradeoffs between these risks and factors such as product functionality, product efficacy, process safety and resource use. Through case studies this report demonstrates how different users in contrasting decision contexts with diverse priorities can apply the framework. This report will be an essential resource to the chemical industry, environmentalists, ecologists and state and local governments.

Portfolios Plus Linda Mabry, 1999-06-23. This book is intended to help educators in developing and implementing assessment systems to recognize the many options available for consideration.

Making Alternate Assessment Score Reports a Meaningful Tool for Parents

William Hollis Blackwell (III.), 2012 Abstract While No Child Left Behind assessment policies require student performance on alternate assessments to be reported to parents there have been no research studies and limited guidance on how this information is best reported There are two issues resulting from the lack of research and guidance First there is no established standard for what information should be reported It is left to individual states to determine the types of information reported and there is no provision to ensure that parents have a voice in determining the information that is most helpful to them Second there is no guidance on exactly how the information should be presented This study directly examined these issues within the context of Pennsylvania The research question was What are meaningful ways of reporting alternate assessment results to parents Data were collected through a variety of methods including interviews with parents teachers special education program administrators and alternate assessment design team members and through the development and trial testing of sample alternate assessment score reports with parents and teachers Based on the findings the answer to the research question is twofold a there are specific design features that can be incorporated into alternate assessment score reports to assist with parents interpretation and use of the reports and b the definition of report has to be expanded beyond a traditional paper report in order to include in person and video opportunities for presenting information The findings from this study contribute to special education policy and practice at three levels a the design and reporting of alternate assessment results to parents b the translation of federal and state assessment policies into practices that directly benefit parents and students and c the ways teachers and parents exchange information during the educational planning process
