

Urban Places

World Cities

The nature, character and spatial distribution of world cities.

World City Definition

A world city (global city) is a large city that has importance to the operation of the global systems of finance, trade, politics, communications, aid, tourism and entertainment. Examples of world cities:

- New York, USA
- London, England
- Tokyo, Japan
- Paris, France

Nature of World Cities

- World cities are the command and control centres in the new global economy and are formed as a result of slow urbanisation.
- They are both a product and cause of economic globalisation. In the past, world cities exported manufactured goods (secondary industry), today they export services and ideas (tertiary industry).
- They are rich in human capital (skills, knowledge, experience) and therefore hold the decision makers of the world.
