

CRIMINAL VICTIMIZATION IN SEVENTEEN INDUSTRIALIZED COUNTRIES

*Esther Bousten
Heike Goudriaan
Paul Nieuwbeerta*

Results from the International Crime Victims Survey (ICVS) confirm that property crime is declining in industrialized countries. Better home security and other forms of crime prevention have possibly contributed to the downward trend – also apparent from police statistics. Generally speaking, the ICVS suggests that crime rose between 1988 and 1991, did not show much change in 1995 and fell back in 1999. This is the dominant pattern in many industrialized countries. Over all sweeps of the surveys, New Zealand, Australia and the Netherlands have the highest overall crime rates, while the lowest rates can be found in Japan, Northern Ireland and Portugal.

The present paper deals with these and other important findings from the ICVS in the industrialized countries and focuses on the results of the ICVS 2000. Details can be found in Van Kesteren, Mayhew and Nieuwbeerta (2000) and in Nieuwbeerta and Van Kesteren (2001).

THE ICVS IN THE INDUSTRIALIZED COUNTRIES

The ICVS is the most far-reaching program of fully standardized sample surveys looking at householders' experience with crime, policing, crime prevention and feelings of unsafety and it has been executed in a large number of countries. The reason for setting up the ICVS was the inadequacy of other, international comparable, measures of the nature and magnitude of crime. Figures of offences recorded by the police are problematic due to differences in the way the police define, record and count crime. And since the police get most of their information about offences through victim reports, while victims do not report all offences, police figures can differ as a result of differences in reporting behavior. It is also difficult to make comparisons of independently organized crime surveys, as these differ in design and coverage. Up till today, surveys have been carried out in twenty-four industrialized countries and in forty-six cities in developing countries and countries in transition. In the industrialized countries, there were four rounds of the ICVS,
