Ellie loved decorating for Christmas, especially the giant tree her family had in the living room each year. When she opened the box of ornaments, she noticed the delicate glass star that always sat on top. It was her favorite decoration because it had belonged to her great-grandmother. But this year, something was wrong. The star was missing from its usual box. Ellie felt worried, worried she might have dropped it or misplaced it. She searched through every corner of the room, looking for the star. While digging, she found a small piece of glittering gold paper.

"That's strange," she whispered. She followed the tiny sparkle down the hallway and into the guest room. More little pieces of gold were scattered on the carpet, almost like the star had crumbled as it fell. When Ellie stepped on the carpet, she gasped. The star was there—completely intact—but long gone from its box. She pulled it out gently, relieved it wasn't broken. Her little brother, Timmy, was in the room, looking sheepish. "I tried to help decorate," he admitted. "The star fell out of my hands." Ellie smiled. "Next time, use me first. Accidents happen." Together, they placed the star on top of the tree. The lights turned on, it shone brightly, casting a warm glow over the room. Christmas was finally complete.
