Crowning Mercy:

A Crowning Mercy Bernard Cornwell, Susannah Kells, 2003 A highly entertaining wonderfully colourful story now revealed to be written by one of our favourite historical novelists In mid seventeenth century England the nation was in upheaval In the Dorset countryside one sunlit afternoon a young girl illicitly bathing in a stream first fell in love with a passing stranger Her parents called her Dorcas but he called her Champion and that s what she longed to be then and forever She had one gift left for her by her unknown father a pendant made of gold banded by tiny glowing stones and at its base was a seal engraved with an axe and the words St Matthew So when she flees before the unbearable worthy suitor who is forced upon her after her forbidden meeting she takes this and the delicate lace gloves with her and hopes to find her father and her lover There are four of these intricately wrought seals each owned by a stranger each holding a secret within And when all four seals are united then the holder will have access to great wealth and power That is Champion s inheritance But to claim this and find again her summer love she must follow the course her father s legacy charts for her It is a road full of both peril and enchantment A Crowning Mercy was first published in 1983 under the name Susannah Kells It has been out of print for 10 years HarperCollins are delighted to be able to re publish it
