

SYNCHRONET BBS SOFTWARE

BEGINNING, DEVELOPMENT AND FUTURE

BBSCD: Rob, when and why was Digital Dynamics founded?

ROB: Digital Dynamics was founded in November of 1988 as a computer programming consultation firm specializing in multiuser applications in a IBM PC network environment.

BBSCD: How did the BBS come into the picture?

ROB: We spawned a BBS to support its customers and as an information system for the general public. This BBS became a very popular system in southern California with the focus on technical discussions, online games, and file transfers.

BBSCD: What started the thought of your own BBS Software?

ROB: The BBS software in use at that time did not have many of the features that the users and the sysops wanted, including the most important feature — multiple nodes. There were other packages available that supported multiple nodes, but they lacked in file transfer features and customization options. And every package tested proved noticeably slower than the existing software.

BBSCD: When did development start on your BBS Software?

ROB: In December of 1990, I decided it was time to start the development of our own BBS software. Since Digital Dynamics was not a commercial software company and no client had requested the package, it was assumed to be used in-house only. In July of 1991, Digital Dynamics started running Synchronet, their latest creation.

BBSCD: What started the actual promotion of Synchronet?

ROB: Requests from other sysops to purchase the software were so numerous and sudden, that it was soon decided to start a commercial development project of Synchronet. In November of 1991, version 1a of Synchronet was available for purchase. As more and more sysops and users were getting familiar with Synchronet, the comments and suggestions began to pour in. Most of the suggestions were implemented almost immediately and available as free revision upgrades and many were slated for future version upgrades.
