table When boards complain that we re spending too much time on governance what they re usually referring to is compliance A compliance focus leads to an emphasis on governance as an area of subject matter expertise a cost an overhead a back office activity something which has to be done to satisfy regulation and Code It manifests itself through a culture of box ticking Directors and senior management perceive and derive little value from the exercise Seamus Gillen believes that governance is a commercial discipline providing a fundamental underpin to the process of value creation value protection and value preservation Governance drives the quality of strategic decision making that helps an organization achieve its strategic objectives more efficiently and effectively High standards of governance create competitive advantage a concept as applicable to not for profits and public sector bodies as to commercial entities For organizations pursuing this approach governance becomes a liberating theology and a critical business enabler Building Better Boards resonates with professionals operating across international jurisdictions and is inclusive rather than exclusive The book emphasises and demonstrates that governance is a live issue an ongoing priority area of board focus with developments occurring around the world on literally a daily basis It identifies good practice and progressive thinking across sectors and geographies It builds on thought leadership and case studies as well as regulatory guidance and Code principles It offers new models and approaches based on real life experience All to provide boards and directors as well as senior executives with the means to leverage governance to achieve their strategic objectives To help them lead and succeed in a changing world Building Better Boards + Authentic Leadership + Corporate Governance and Accountability 3E David A.
