Looking back, it feels both that things deteriorated in ways which were unexpectedly rapid, and that keeping UTS Review and Cultural Studies Review alive always required persistence. Only a couple of years ago, proud of becoming a 'Diamond' Open Access e-journal published under a Creative Commons license we wrote to our Editorial Board members:

Generally, the Journal is going from strength to strength. We continue to publish two high-quality open-access issues per year featuring excellent essays, new writing and, thanks to Lee Wallace's work over the last few years, superb reviews. The book series, CSR books, is set to publish another volume this year. Our readership continues to expand, as shown in the rise of our readership from 23,441 in 2012 to 92,951 in 2016. These figures do not include those readers (26,191 in 2016) who browse or read online without downloading a specific article. We've also recently received strong endorsement from SCOPUS accepting our inclusion in their abstract and citation database:

"This is an impressive journal that appears to be in rude health, from the editorial policy to the production schedule and online access. Articles are being well-cited, which is an indication of the importance of the journal in its research field. For these reasons, it merits inclusion in SCOPUS."

But a brief glance over the 'publication' credits at the end of this introduction will remind you that the Journal has had four different publishers in a quarter of a century and one of us can recall a couple of occasions when funds from their personal research account were siphoned off by a School Manager impatient with the Journal's account heading deeper into debt.

The immediate causes for this being the final issue of Cultural Studies Review are clear enough. For some time now our financial position has become increasingly unviable as most of the institutions that have traditionally provided financial support have been unable or unwilling to continue to do so. Over the last few years, we have lost the financial support of the University of Technology (UTS) Humanities and Social Sciences, Curtin University and Sydney University. That left only the School of Culture and Communication at The University of Melbourne and the Faculty of Law at UTS as our current financial backers. Because that funding is not
