Masterpiece Rifles of the Cumberland

By Mel Stewart Haska

Carefully rolling it over, the signature, Jacob Young, came into view. Elegant in its simplicity, the long graceful rifle was built around an exquisite hand-made flintlock. This lock, also signed by the maker, was painstakingly wrought at a time when high-quality English locks would have been readily available. The production of this lock – the heart of the rifle – showed conviction, pride, and perhaps ego. Just to produce this lock surely took more time and effort than making all the other components of the rifle combined.

Figure 2. Jacob Young produced this exquisite handmade lock at a time that English flintlocks would have been readily available. Its waterproof flashpan and inset frizzen cover is lined with pure gold. Note the gold flash guard dovetailed into the barrel surrounding a gold touch hole liner.

Figure 3. The owner's name, "Wm. Wald Woodfork", is engraved in graceful script on the silver sideplate. Notice the sculpting of the wrist and bold comb.

Both the priming pan and the enclosure of the frizzen were lined with pure gold; a gold flash guard, dovetailed into the iron of the barrel, surrounded a gold touchhole liner. The bolts holding the lock were overlaid with silver and rested upon a silver sideplate designed with a heart-shaped finial. Upon this sideplate, proudly engraved in beautiful script, was the owner's name - Wm. Wald Woodfork. The patchbox was fashioned from a single piece of cast brass and expertly fitted with a "captured" lid, completely enclosed by a delicately engraved brass surround.

The trigger guard was also unique, constructed with a reverse curve at the termination of the grip rail kissing the rear support of the guard. The cheekpiece held the largest of a dozen silver inlays, a large elongated diamond decorated with an elegantly engraved Federal eagle. No screws or pins visibly attached this inlay, and upon personal one finds that it is held in place with a pin inserted from under the cheekpiece, an arduous task, but one obviously important to the maker so that nothing distracted, or would dilodge his decoration.
