

Bedside Manner and The Art of Caring

Bedside manner is one of the most important factors contributing to a positive resident experience. When caregivers are more engaged with their residents and demonstrate strong empathy through active listening and developing a positive relationship, we may better understand what the resident needs are and how to meet them.

A good bedside manner requires more than just natural ability, it requires applying learned skills that put residents at ease and promotes a trusting relationship.

- Pay attention
- Show empathy
- Be honest
- Address them by name
- Don't judge
- Engage and educate

Showing respect for the patient and their humanity, making the patient feel valued and respected are key to a good bedside manner
