

that French army doctors admitted all they could do was to pray to be spared the outbreak of an epidemic. From there the internees were sent to the provinces—often to be unloaded on nothing but a damp ground fenced off with barbed wire or in front of a ramshackle barn which they themselves had to make into a shelter; for months they had neither tables nor benches—in fact, nothing whatever to sit on. But even worse than the physical inconveniences were the hardships which soulless routine inflicted upon them: difficulties in the way of writing or getting letters or parcels or newspapers, and, above all, the uncertainty of their fate. It had been promised that at an early date they would be sorted out; in fact, different categories were created and commissions were set up which contested each other's competence and cancelled one another's decisions. It was a terrible mess. To get a case settled, three different Ministerial departments had to agree, and some military authority had finally to decide and give the order for release. The result was that genuine Nazis who happened to have married a Frenchwoman were set free, while notable German Anti-Hitlerites who had languished for years in German prisons and
