The Role of Attitude Inside and Outside Today's Organizations

Title: The Role of Attitude in Today's Organizations;
It's influence on the employee's private and professional life.
Author: Nsubuga William Michael
Finalized: 2008
Tutor: Bo Westerlund

Abstract:

This thesis investigates the influence of attitude on the life of an individual and the role that it can play inside and outside today's organizations. The purpose of the thesis is to gain insight on the subject of attitude and its significance both in the life of today's employee and on the management and leadership of today's organizations. I will endeavor to investigate the importance of cultivating a positive attitude and the consequences of yielding to a negative attitude. I will also discuss why attitude not only can influence the firm's progress but also the external image and advancement of the organization as well.

With the abduction and narrative approaches, I will endeavor to explain the importance of maintaining a positive attitude and ways of understanding individuals' attitudes and their influence on their overall performance. I will also attempt to address how employees in a given organization can deal with a customer who has a sour attitude. Moreover, I'll address some of the possible causes of negative attitudes. The theoretical research will help expound on the subject matter. Through empirical research, I'll attempt to address the fact that despite an employee's skills and competence, positive attitude can be an added advantage.

With an understanding based of my personal life experience, I'll explain how I struggled with negative attitudes especially during my early years in Sweden and how I eventually made an attitude adjustment. My personal experience at the Sheraton will be used as a case study on the subject of attitude. Furthermore, I'll examine some other life experiences such as the lessons I learned from my father on the subject. Besides, I'll discuss the challenge of attitude on leadership as well. Finally, I will conclude with a discussion on the fact that attitude needs to be addressed in a good-enough approach thereby circumventing the trap of making attitude appear to be the principle aspect as this may lead to absolutism.

A Dissertation about Nothing George Babe Jackson,2005 Today the world seems poised at a threshold of a greater humanity We seem to be on the edge of something greater than ourselves Hard evidence may not be apparent but intuition shouts out a signal that civilization is about to build a huge scaffold on all previous knowledge This will move the world much closer to our quest for peace justice and our relationship with God Some of the first winds are being detected in Science and Technology and Social events too which indicate that gigantic change is about to occur As is and has been true with all change there will be some radical shifts and some subtle gentle shifts Overall this change will result in some giant leaps forward in our thinking including our relationships with each other For humanity the world is growing smaller by leaps and bounds With this smaller world humanity is becoming more homogenized Changing our concepts about many things will seem like chaos to some But I invite you to explore these theories with a little honest thought and maybe when the dust settles the sunshine will appear once again brighter than before *A Dissertation on Nothing: Or Remarks on a Letter to W.
