

developments in the relevant areas. During the last few years, strategic human resource management especially has emerged as an important stream in the HRM literature and has considerably enriched the study of IJVs. However, it must be noted in the book's favour that there is a dearth of research on the operations of IJVs in East Asia, despite the increasing importance of business activity in this region. This volume partially fills this gap by publishing a number of pioneering papers intended to lay the basis for further research. It would be a valuable companion for researchers and practising managers who wish to be better informed on this important subject. Overall, this book does make a contribution to the study of IJVs in one of the most vital regions in the world.

Russell Trood & Deborah McNamara (eds) (1996)

The Asia-Australian survey 1996-97

Melbourne: Macmillan. 632 pp, ISBN 1322-431-X, $95 (hardback)

Trood and McNamara's work is an impressive collection of data, statistics, reports, addresses, contacts, references, readings, general and specific information on all Asian countries. The book is divided into three parts: some overall themes as an introduction, the detailed description of all important countries in Asia forming the essential part of the book, and a reference section. With over 400 pages, the 'Countries of Asia' chapter is the main part of the book; it is divided into two sections. The first reviews a number of countries in detail, while the second part provides short profiles of the other countries. Unfortunately, the authors do not explain the criteria used for selection: why, for example, Laos (4.7 million people) or Cambodia (10 million people) are in the main section, while Bangladesh (117.8 million people) or Pakistan (126.3 million people) are in the second. Membership or non-membership of APEC was not used—Brunei although an APEC member is in the 'not important' second category—nor was ASEAN membership. In politics, size matters and to assign 2½ pages to countries with well above 100 million inhabitants, while giving details about countries with less than a tenth of their population seems unjustified.

The crucial issue in 'The year in review' is the discussion of Australia's relationship to Asia. While politicians might discuss Australia's position to Asian countries, in the sphere of business, numbers speak. Asia accounted for 50% of Australia's merchandise trade in 1995. Australia's biggest trading partners in Asia are Japan, South Korea, China, Singapore, Taiwan and Hong Kong, and Japan was Australia's largest recipient of service exports in 1993-94. While quoting Bob Hawke's statement 'instead of seeking security against Asia, [Australia] should seek security in and with Asia', the issue of security seems somewhat overemphasized throughout the book. Looking at the information presented in Trood and McNamara's book, the key link of Australia to Asia seems less reliant on military or cultural closeness than on steadily increasing economic relationship. With the end of the Cold War, military issues
