

The Lockless Door

*It went many years,
But at last came a knock,
And I thought of the door
With no lock to lock.*

*I blew out the light,
I tip-toed the floor,
And raised both hands
In prayer to the door.*

*But the knock came again
My window was wide;
I climbed on the sill
And descended outside.*

*Back over the sill
I bade a "Come in"
To whoever the knock
At the door may have been.*

*So at a knock
I emptied my cage
To hide in the world
And alter with age.*

A

Crowd of Joy at the Door Mark Bohrer, 2016-09-18 From the Introduction In the past it always seemed strange to me when someone said I'm a poet My reaction was that well really no one is a poet I suppose this is an unusual thought coming from someone who writes poetry But it comes from the feeling that remains with me today that I don't write poems as much as they write me My job is to listen and hold the pen But if the poem writes the poet then that changes who is or isn't a poet doesn't it As human beings we have language built into our fiber All of us can write poems if we listen to that voice whether it speaks from within or without it's there for all of us I believe that poetry can do things for us that other forms of writing and for that matter the other arts can't do The ability to be intimate and personal and yet also shared and universal is something other forms can't quite match There is something about the portability of a poem that I find serves me well in life In that spirit I offer this invitation Come inside A crowd of joy is waiting at the door
