Dynamics Of Regional Integration:

Dynamics of Regional Integration Uwe Walz, 2012-02-17 Deepening and enlarging regional integration blocs is high on the political agenda as can be seen most notably in the last decade of the European integration process. The effects of this process have been studied extensively. But until recently these studies have been limited to the theoretical analysis of static effects of regional integration. The revival of growth theory has however in principle provided a set of models and tools which allow to investigate the dynamic effects of regional integration. At the same time the new regional economics or economic geography literature allowing to focus on the special features of regional integration and integration blocs has emerged. The aim of this study is to merge endogenous growth approaches with new regional economics models in order to investigate various aspects of the long run effects of regional integration in a dynamic general equilibrium framework. It is needless to say that such an analysis can cover only selected issues and leaves others aside. It is the purpose of the present study however to look at both types of regional integration: the dynamic effects of a deepening of the integration process as well as of an enlargement of the integration bloc. This is done on the basis of an investigation of empirical regularities of regional developments in an integration bloc mainly in the European Union. Asia-Pacific and Latin America: Dynamics of Regional Integration and International Cooperation Akio Hosono, Abstract Introduction I Analytical approach and main topics II Building institutions for economic integration and expanding intra regional economic relations in East Asia and Latin America III Dynamics of Industry development in East Asia economic integration and international cooperation IV Dynamics of industrial development and international cooperation in Latin America V Concluding remarks toward closer economic relations between Asia Pacific and Latin America The Dynamics of Regional Integration at the International Level Philip R. Regional Integration Dynamics in Central Africa: an Appraisal of ECCAS Francis Nguendi Ikome, 2013 Although Central Africa has one of the longest histories in regional integration efforts on the continent and despite the existence of very strong impulses for the pursuit of regional integration in the sub region the pace of integration has been painfully slow resulting in the sub region being perceived as one of the least integrated on the continent. The study therefore provides an analysis of the dynamics of integration in the Central African sub region with a particular focus on the Economic Community of Central African States ECCAS including its relationship with the smaller though parallel Economic and Monetary Community of Central Africa CEMAC. While ECCAS is potentially a bigger economic space than CEMAC it has made less progress in integrative processes and in meeting its charter objectives. It has nevertheless received greater recognition as the Central African pillar in the OAU/AU continental integration project as well as from global actors and institutions. The pace of integration in Central Africa has serious implications on the prospects of actualizing the continent's aspiration to establishing a continent wide economic space. Dynamics and Politics in Regional Integration Arrangements Maurice W.
