Assessing Cow-calf Welfare Gabrielle Elizabeth Simon,2015 Beef producers use assessment programs to communicate animal welfare information to consumers and retailers but to date there is no program designed for cow calf operations The first step in creating a welfare assessment is to investigate current practices and identify risk factors for welfare outcomes in order to inform decisions about program design The objectives of this study were to assess management facilities producer attitudes stockperson handling and cattle health and behavior on cow calf operations in order to 1 gather prevalence information 2 identify risk factors for welfare outcomes and 3 inform assessment design Cow n 3065 health and behavior and stockperson handling was observed during a routine procedure e g pregnancy checks on 30 California cow calf ranches Management and producer attitudes were evaluated through an interview and facility features were recorded at the chute and water access points Multivariable models were built for cattle health and stockperson handling outcomes using herd level predictors and for individual cattle behavior using stockperson handling measures at the cow level Cattle health problems were rare e g prevalence of lame cattle 1 3 1 5 0 to 7 1% mean SD range whereas cattle behavior and stockperson handling varied among ranches e g cattle balking 22 0 21 9 1 6 to 78 3% electric prod use 23 5 21 5 0 to 73 0% Thus the most relevant risk factor results were among handling and cattle behavior Use of the BQA training program had a protective effect on cow cleanliness and mis catching cattle in the restraint odds ratio OR 0 2 0 5 respectively Hydraulic chutes increased the risk of vocalizations OR 2 7 possibly because these systems can apply higher pressures which increase this behavior The use of moving aids was protective for balking at the herd level but a risk factor when used to handle individual cows OR 0 3 34 1 Likewise individual cows were at a higher risk of balking vocalizing stumbling and falling in the chute and stumbling and running at exit when an they were touched with an electric prod OR 1 7 When considering assessment design we faced challenges in terms of the feasibility e g the number of stockpersons handling cattle fluctuated so recording this measure was difficult validity e.g. nasal and ocular discharge can be caused by wind or illness and comparability e.g. we needed to define an explicit period for observing cattle to increase comparability across ranches of certain measures This study indicates that variation exists and improvement is possible in stockperson handling and cattle behavior in the chute and has identified risk factors associated with these outcomes These results along with methodological considerations will inform the design of future cow calf welfare assessments

The Future of Animal Farming Marian Stamp Dawkins, Roland Bonney, 2011-09-20 Does animal welfare have a place in sustainable farming or do the demands of a rising human population and the threat of climate change mean that the interests of animals must be put aside Can we improve the way we keep animals and still feed the world or is it a choice between ethics and economics The aim of this book is to challenge the them and us thinking that sets the interests of humans and farm animals against each other and to show that to be really sustainable farming needs to include not ignore animal welfare The authors of this remarkable book come from a diversity of backgrounds industry animal welfare organizations academic institutions and practical farming They are united in arguing that farm animals matter and that sustainable farming must have animal welfare at its ethical core along with the production of healthy affordable food and care for the environment

The Behavior and Welfare of Farm Animals William F. Hall, 1983

Advances and Perspectives in Farm Animal Learning and Cognition Christian Nawroth, Jan Langbein, 2019-10-18. Research on animal learning and cognition has so far mainly focused on a few prominent model species including primates, corvids and dogs. For years comparative psychologists and ethologists have been suggesting that more animal species should be considered in comparative cognitive science. The abundance and accessibility of livestock offer an opportunity not merely to extend the comparative approach but also to deepen our knowledge of the mental lives of farm animals. Such approaches also help to assess the needs of farm animals in order to improve their welfare. In recent years scientific interest in different aspects of farm animal psychology including emotionality, personality and cognitive capacities has been on the rise, proving that farm animals have sophisticated cognitive skills to comprehend and cope with their environment. As knowledge of how farm animals perceive and interact with their physical and social environments is crucial for animal welfare, the aim of this Research Topic is to promote investigations of farm animal cognitive capacities and their implications for animal welfare related issues. We have therefore collected original research and review articles as well as opinion and perspective papers that are distributed among the two hosting magazines.

Frontiers in Veterinary Science section Animal Behavior and Welfare and Frontiers in Psychology section Comparative Psychology The published articles present state of the art research on farm animal learning and cognition highlight future perspectives in this research area and pinpoint shortcomings and limitations in interpreting current findings They offer new cross disciplinary frameworks e g links between affective states and cognition and discuss the applied implementation of these findings e g cognitive enrichment These contributions will increase our understanding of the cognitive mechanisms that enable farm animals to effectively interact with their environment and pave the way for future cross disciplinary endeavors
