

Berkeley's Phenomenalism

Berkeley's phenomenalism posits that the physical world is entirely dependent on perception. There is no material substance; instead, objects are merely collections of ideas or sensations experienced by observers.

Berkeley's view challenges the notion of a world existing independently of our minds.

Dependence on Perception

For something to exist, it must be perceived by a mind. If no one is perceiving an object, it does not exist in the material sense but continues to exist as a potential perception within the mind of God, who perceives everything constantly.

Role of God

Berkeley introduces the idea of God as the eternal perceiver. Even when no human is perceiving an object, God is always perceiving everything, thereby ensuring the continuous existence of all things.

Critique of Materialism

Berkeley argues against materialism (the belief in the existence of matter independent of perception). He believes that this concept is incoherent because we can never experience matter directly; we only experience our perceptions of it.
