

Quantitative drivers

Independent analysts indicate that it is 10 times more expensive to deal with risks in a fragmented manner as compared to an integrated approach. Statistics show that 30% IT investment in silo-based support for risk and compliance management is wasted.

Is there a model that helps save costs? Is there a model that can help us generate more revenue? Is there a model that helps people at operational level deal with risks in a streamlined fashion? Can we be the change agents to help ourselves and our organizations?

Constituents of the 360 degree risk management model

The 360 degree risk management model comprises people, processes, tools, services and robust governance.

Who are the People? As we are all aware, stakeholders belong to both the performing and outsourcing organizations.

What is the Governance Model? The governance model can be visualized as a PMO with Subject Matter Experts in risk, providing services to units across the organization.

Typical services rendered are portfolio and project support, training, tools support, corporate risk database maintenance, and innovation.

At the portfolio level, the model helps in analyzing trends in risks and providing recommendations. Guidance on responding to risks and mitigating them early is provided at the project level. Training and certification programs are conducted to increase awareness and address risks creatively. Tools are developed and maintained for managing risks. The model provides an agile set of processes that commence early in the project lifecycle. Senior management buy-in and involvement indicate the significance of addressing risks effectively.

In order to standardize execution of activities and services, the model uses a variety of tools and techniques. The tools aid in project plan creation, associated budget preparation, performance tracking of portfolio, and dissemination of knowledge across the organization.

Implementation Approach and Efficiency Index

The success of an idea lies in its implementation and ability to measure efficiency. The philosophy behind the approach recommended here is that the model should be agile, self-sustaining and evolving. The Software Engineering Institute (SEI) recommends the concept of continuous risk management. This is achieved by using the Plan-Do-Check-Act or PDCA cycle.

1. Plan phase – Key stakeholders are identified and the framework is defined.
2. Do phase – After the processes and governance model are set up, the focus shifts to execution of services. Tools are deployed. Receivers of the service utilize the model right from the stage of project contract formulation to project closure. Recommendations of the risk gurus are implemented.
3. Check phase – Implementation efficiency is measured through a set of key performance indicators (KPIs). The KPIs are along several dimensions and help in measuring the positive and negative impacts of risk, for example:

% of risks found at beginning of project to those found at later stages
% of revenue saved due to early mitigation of risk
% of revenue increase due to innovation in risk management
% of knowledge sharing documents shared due to risk management to the total number of knowledge sharing documents from the project
% of Project Managers who are willing to take up high risk projects to the total number of Project Managers
Risk exposure amount as a percentage of the total project value
Usability of the service
Customer satisfaction index from projects that were serviced
