

Antennas – Radiation Patterns

Radiation Pattern:

It is clear in Figure that in some very specific directions there are zeros, or nulls, in the pattern indicating no radiation.

The protuberances between the nulls are referred to as lobes, and the main, or major, lobe is in the direction of maximum radiation.

There are also side lobes and back lobes. These other lobes divert power away from the main beam and are desired as small as possible.

Beam Width:

One measure of a beam's directional nature is the beamwidth, also called the half-power beamwidth or 3-dB beamwidth.
