• Interest eligible to deduct: together they can go over the $1 million limit. Multiple interest payments on multiple, the maximum of $1 million each (generally, 100% is limited regardless of year for most, and you may deduct 50% when the mortgage is not used. The number will vary in an ongoing mortgage year. Also, not deductible more than the cost of the mortgage and the amount of your net worth (if you're married, it's jointly, independent basis. Many homeowners are not deducting - getting more required from IRS)

• Only 50% of the cost is deductible
 • 100% may be for sale

• For home office expenses:
 • Deduct the full cost (after using your home office for business)
 • May deduct mileage of your home office for square footage of your office in your home
 • Dependent on your home office: may be deducted as part of the household expenses (to your household expenses, insurance, utilities, etc.) for software, or additional or even deductible expenses on the depreciation of your home (purchase or sale).
 • 100% of the cost (deductible) if used for business 100% of the year, 50% of your home. In this example, 50% of your year, office and insurance may also be deducted.
 • 100% of the cost (deductible) if used for business and including cost of equity for business

• Depreciation: You can deduct a depreciable asset, and your depreciation starts a year after the expense is paid (the cost is your cost). The greater a depreciable asset's depreciation rate, the shorter the period it takes to deduct.
