Blood drives a chance to give back, build morale

BY NANCY KIRSCH | CONTRIBUTING WRITER

IT was the Orlando, Fla., nightclub mass shootings that inspired Marcy King to arrange a blood drive at Rebuilders Automotive Supply Co., in Coventry, where she is director, buying division. "Last June, my husband [Steve King, vice president and co-owner of the company] and I were in Florida ... and the nightclub attack had happened. ... I started thinking, 'Horrible things are happening ... and we're not doing anything about it,'" she said.

Immediately upon returning home, King contacted the Rhode Island Blood Center to schedule a blood drive at her company. Nearly half of the Coventry-based company's 100 employees donated — a far better response than the 30 percent she'd been told was typical at most drives — and enjoyed breakfast and lunch supplied by the company.

"We don't want [donations] spiking after spikes come valleys," said Tompkins, emphasizing RIBC's need for regular, consistent donations. With school and university blood drives ceasing or dramatically declining during summer months, businesses across the state represent a key target market for blood drives then, and year-round.

"Once they're out of the school environment, we have a hard time getting them back [to donate], unless they're in an environment that sponsors drives," Asadorian said. "That's why it's critical for us to grow our sponsorships." As the primary supplier to 10 of Rhode Island's 12 hospitals and a secondary supplier to many more southern New England hospitals, RIBC

Blood drives align perfectly with Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Rhode Island's position as a health care company, said Carolyn Blaine, managing director of community relations. The health insurer averages four or five drives annually, with donations from 3-30 percent of its 300 employees. In addition to Blue Cross, frequent blood donors include Fidelity
