Richardson, Jno. H. Richardson, 2002 John Richardson a tall person has always been fascinated by the dwarf world and in the course of researching a piece for ESQUIRE magazine came to realise he was doing much more than simply documenting the lives of a few quirky characters He was entering another world a sub culture that has long been the subject of a peculiar fascination to many people but much misunderstood As he says Dwarfs are like us but more so as if the process of distilling humanity to fit their size also made it stronger At the centre of the book is Dr Steven Kopits of Johns Hopkins a remarkable doctor who has dedicated his life to the treatment of dwarfs and who has been shunned by the medical community as a result Dr Kopits has offered Richardson complete access to himself and his patients including the poignant love story of two dwarfs Michael and Meredith a heart rending drama in its own right By weaving these threads together Richardson will redefine the way we look at dwarfs at others who live on the margins of society and ultimately at ourselves
