Dynamics Of Data Base:

Modelling Database Dynamics Udo W. Lipeck, Bernhard Thalheim, 2013-03-09 Database modelling is concerned with the design of reliable and efficient database systems Three different approaches to modelling can be identified structure oriented process oriented and behaviour oriented Database literature has traditionally focused on structure oriented approaches but it is now widely recognised that problems can be solved more effectively by integrating all three As a result modelling database dynamics is now considered to be as important as modelling static database structures This volume contains selected papers from the Fourth International Workshop on Foundations of Models and Languages for Data and Objects held in Volkse Germany 19 22 October 1992 This series of international workshops was initiated by the Working Group on Foundations of Information Systems part of the German Association for Informatics It provides an international forum for the discussion of current research into database theory and its application to database technology The theme of this particular workshop was modelling the dynamic behaviour of database systems in formal frameworks As object oriented principles are being widely used in current research work particular emphasis was also given to object dynamics Among the topics covered in this volume are specifying the dynamics of complex objects databases updates in a rule based language for objects an order sorted approach to active objects non deterministic aspects of database transformations involving object creation monitoring temporal permissions using partially evaluated transition graphs a formalisation of logic databases and integrity constraints a comparison of approaches for modelling dynamics of databases Modelling Database Dynamics provides a comprehensive overview of current research into the modelling and use of database dynamics It will provide invaluable reading for researchers postgraduate students and anyone interested in the theoretical foundations of computer science

Dynamic Data Analysis James Ramsay, Giles Hooker, 2017-06-27 This text focuses on the use of smoothing methods for developing and estimating differential equations following recent developments in functional data analysis and building on techniques described in Ramsay and Silverman 2005 Functional Data Analysis The central concept of a dynamical system as a buffer that translates sudden changes in input into smooth controlled output responses has led to applications of previously analyzed data opening up entirely new opportunities for dynamical systems. The technical level has been kept low so that those with little or no exposure to differential equations as modeling objects can be brought into this data analysis landscape. There are already many texts on the mathematical properties of ordinary differential equations or dynamic models and there is a large literature distributed over many fields on models for real world processes consisting of differential equations. However a researcher interested in fitting such a model to data or a statistician interested in the properties of differential equations estimated from data will find rather less to work with. This book fills that gap.

Interactive GPU-based Visualization of Large Dynamic Particle Data Martin Falk, Sebastian Grottel, Michael Krone, Guido Reina, 2022-05-31. Prevalent types of data in scientific visualization are volumetric data, vector field data and particle based data. Particle data typically originates from measurements and simulations in various fields such as life sciences or physics. The particles are often visualized directly that is by simple representants like spheres. Interactive rendering facilitates the exploration and visual analysis of the data. With increasing data set sizes in terms of particle numbers interactive high quality visualization is a challenging task. This is especially true for dynamic data or abstract representations that are based on the raw particle data. This book covers direct particle visualization using simple glyphs as well as abstractions that are application driven such as clustering and aggregation. It targets visualization researchers and developers who are interested in visualization techniques for large dynamic particle based data. Its explanations focus on GPU accelerated algorithms for high performance rendering and data processing that run in real time on modern desktop hardware. Consequently the implementation of said algorithms and the required data structures to make use of the capabilities of modern graphics APIs are discussed in detail. Furthermore it covers GPU accelerated methods for the generation of application dependent abstract representations. This includes various representations commonly used in application areas such as structural biology, systems biology, thermodynamics and astrophysics.
